

Week 6: September 30, 2022

Lots of things affect a child's chance of success in school – academics, like math and reading to be certain, but also non-academic things like classroom behavior, attitudes and approaches towards learning, and even how they get along with others.

Our school will be using a digital program, Ripple Effects, as a tool to build social emotional skills, connect students to the community, and improve academic success. Through the program, your child will be developing a core set of social-emotional abilities that have been shown to help students have a stronger, more positive sense of self. It helps them do better in school, respect others, and build skills that can help them make good choices about drugs, violence, and other life challenges. These key abilities are:

- Knowing yourself
- Controlling yourself
- Being aware of others
- Connecting with others
- Decision-making

We have chosen this program because:

- It's based on rigorous research about what works in increasing young people's chance of overall school success
- It's personalized, adaptive design allows each student to privately leverage their strengths to work on areas that are challenging
- We've been able to customize the program based on our local district guidelines, needs, and constraints.

With the use of Ripple Effects we hope to develop a learning environment in which every student is inspired to become their personal best. Please ask your child about the survey they took on Ripple Effects this week!
